Market update

Fiscal policy moves in the UK featured heavily in the headlines. The sharp spike up in bond yields prompted by September's 'mini budget' was reversed after the Bank of England intervened to correct dysfunction in the bond markets and subsequently as new political leadership was installed. The new prime minister and chancellor, promising a more responsible approach to the national finances, substantially withdrew the measures which had so alarmed markets. The reduction in yields, for example with the benchmark 10-year government bond ending the month at around 3.5% - down from a recent peak of 4.5% - brought positive returns for sterling bond markets because prices move inversely to yields. UK government bonds ('gilts') as a whole delivered +3.3% over the month, although this represented a relatively minor relief from the savage losses experienced (in common with most global bond markets) since the early days of 2022. For the year to date, gilts have lost -24%.
